Calls Grand Juryman Bookus a Liar and Fight Is Barely Prevented.

MILVERTON TOLD TO SKIDOO!

Investigators Displease Legal Department and General Row Results.

(From Thursday's Advertiser.)

Open warfare has broken out between John Catheart, city and county attorney, and his deputy, Fred Milverton, on one side and the territorial grand jury on the other Catheart yesterday almost came to blows in the grand jury room with C. G. Bockus, one of the members of the grand jury, and in the end both Catheart and Milverton were ejected from the room where the session was being held, the grand jury announcing that it preferred to conduct its own investigations without the doubtful assistance of the city attorney's office. "I don't care to associate with barroom loafers," declared Bockus during the heat of the engagement. "And I am accustomed to being addressed as a gentleman."

"You're a liar!" yelled Catheart thickly, red in the face and convulsed with anger, and thereby he proved conclusively that he is a gentleman.

Catheart has, it seems, "washed his hands'' of the grand jury. The grand jury has certainly washed its hands of Catheart and his deputies, and by calling in another lawyer and excluding Catheart and Milverton from the grand jury room most effectually expressed its lack of confidence in the present force of the city attorney's office.

It is known that for several weeks the situation as concerns Cathcart and the situation as concerns Cathcart and Milverton and the grand jury has been very strained—so strained, in fact, that some weeks ago when C. G. Bockus, one of the grand jurors, was suddenly called away to the Coast on business during the investigation of a case in which the attitude of the city attorney did not appear to good advantage, he did not appear to good advantage, he felt called upon for the sake of the public welfare to write a special report himself, expressing his views on the matter in hand.

It was the action of the city attor-ney's office in connection with the Lane case that caused the open rupture yes-terday. It will be remembered that ease that caused the open rupture yesterday. It will be remembered that Lane, although accused of one of the most disgusting and heinous crimes ever committed in Honelulu, was allowed by the city attorney's office to plead guilty to a minor charge and got off with a sentence of a year in jail.

The grand jury felt outgrand at the

The grand jury felt outraged at the action of the city attorney's off and immediately began an investigation on its own account. But feeling that no aid might be expected from the city aid might be expected from the city attorney's office, the grand jury yesterday requested Deputy City Attorney Fred Milverton, who was supposed to be assisting it in its investigations, to withdraw from the room. Lorrin Andrews, as an independent attorney, was then sent for. He did not know what the grand jury wanted, but obeyed the summons. He was asked a number of questions concerning the Lane case.

While he was before the grand jury

While he was before the grand jury Frod Milverton opened the door and walked in. He was promptly notified that he was not wanted, and he left the room in an apparent huff. The grand jury resumed its work, but in a few minutes the door again opened, and in walked Catheart and Milverton. Catheart red with anger and talking thickly.

thickly.

"We might as well settle this thing right now," he said excitedly "What is this man doing here?" pointing a shaking finger at Lorin Andrews.

"Has he been subposensed? If he has, my office has a right to be present at his examination."

One of the grand jurors stated that Mr. Andrews had not been subpoensed, but had been called in to answer some questions.

"If you want to go over my head," yelled Cathcart, "why don't you go to the attorney general? You have no right to call in an outsider, and I demand that, unless he is being examined under subpoena, he be put out of the room."

C. U. Bockus made some reply to the effect that the grand jury had a right to conduct an investigation in its own

Last Words of Little Japanese Structure to Be Formally Turned Efficient Inquisitors Are Too In- This One Drives Off in a Buggy Killed Accidentally by Eddie Meyer.

Chiona Kimura, a Japanese girl of ten, met a tragic death at Waianas yesterday morning, when Eddie Meyer, the 18-year-old son of Fred Meyer, manager of the plantation, emptied the contents of a shotgun into her breast. The killing was found by a coroner's jury to have been accidental.

Eddie Meyer was gathering mangoes from a tree on the plantation and little Chiona and two playmates, younger than herself, laughed and played so as to irritate him. He told them to leave, but they continued to play and chide him in a spirit of fun.

A Chinese truck farmer in possession of the premises had left an old singlebarrel muzzle-loading gun under the tree, and to seare the children young Meyer picked up the weapon and pretended he was going to shoot them. Chiona Kimura was too young to know the danger of handling a gun, and, of course, she did not run as Meyer expected.

"You had better get out from here," threatened the boy. "If you don't,
I'll shoot you."

The little girl and her companions did not budge.

Thinking, evidently, of becoming a little more threatening, young Meyer raised the gun a little higher and cockad it without knowing how for he was ed it without knowing how far he was going in his effort to frighten away the children. Chiona was standing nearest him and, being the oldest, she was the one at whom Meyer pointed the weapon.

"All right, you shoot," she said, in a spirit of bravado.

Without realizing what he was doing, Meyer pulled the trigger, which sent the full load of shot into the child's body. She fell mortally wounded. Meyer picked her up and laid her under the mango tree, then rushed off to tell his mother. Soon after the wounded girl was carried to the home of her parents. parents.

Doctor McGettigan happened to be at the sugar plantation at that time, and was summoned to treat the child's wounds. He found the load of shot had passed through the little girl's body and severed blood vessels, from which injuries she died a few minutes after his arrival.
